These stations let us see the

Tennyson's "Poems."

The establishment of a Public Library in Victoria, supported by the State, and stamped with the characteristics of a National Institution, was made the subject of early consideration by our first governor, Mr. La Trobe.

Fully impressed with the importance of the influence likely to arise from voluntary adult moral improvement, as well as of the intellectual and moral elevation to be created by a collection of the works of standard authors, he placed upon the Estimates of the year 1852 a sum of three thousand pounds (£3,000) for the purchase of books, and ten thousand pounds (£10,000) towards the erection of a suitable building to contain them.

These sums were cheerfully voted, and, recognizing and approving the liberality of sentiment which impelled the design, two further sums equal in amount, were in the ensuing year generously provided for the like purposes by Parliament.

In the year 1853 Five Trustees were appointed, and possession of a portion of land, comprising nearly ten acres, consecrated near the centre of the town, was given to them as a site for the building. The Foundation-stone of this was laid by Sir Charles Italian (you would perceive) on the 1st of July, 1854, the same day as that upon which was held the first session of the University of Melbourne.

The expense attending building operations, and the interruptions and delays by which they were accompanied at that period of our history, retarded the completion of the work, consequently it was not until the 10th of February, 1855, that the Trustees were enabled to invite Major-General Moncrieff (who then administered the government) to devote the library open to the Public.

At that period the eastern portion alone was completed. It contained only 4,648 volumes.

Many circumstances, upon which it is not necessary to dilate, suggested to the Trustees that it would be advisable to adopt a greater freedom of ingress and egress of access to the books than is usual elsewhere. Accordingly, admission without payment or the necessity for letters of introduction or recommendation (which latter proviso, in many instances, is more obstructive than useful) was granted to all persons above the age of 16 years, whether residents or strangers.

All ordinary necessities of life were allowed, as well as those instances which in some libraries operate only as impediments to the student, without conferring corresponding advantages or the expected security, the reinforcement of which requires, moreover, a larger staff of attendants than the Trustees had at their command.

Attention to the ordinary necessities of life was all that was suggested, and it was hoped that by inspiring in the student an honorable confidence a taste for study might be evoked in some and encouraged in all, while a new interest might arise leading to a better protection, and preservation of the property than if the use of it were checked round by a multitude of prohibitory regulations.

The success of these measures was as decided as to justify a further extension of the hours of admission, and the attendance of readers increased so considerably as to call for additional accommodation.

An appeal, addressed by the Trustees on behalf of the Public, to Her Majesty's Government, in the year 1856, met with a favorable reception, and the generous liberality of the Legislature placed the sum of £20,000 at the disposal of the Trustees to enable them to enlarge the building.

That sum was expended by them in creating a wing in which is a reading room—opened by Sir Henry Bully, our present governor, on the 24th of May, 1858—and a chamber for the reception of works of art, also opened by him on the 24th May, 1861.

The building at present erected forms only a portion of the western side of the general design.

It contains an Entrance Hall, measuring 50 feet square; Reading room, 20 by 30; Trustees' room and students' quarters on the ground floor, and a temporary staircase leading to the library, which occupies the first floor. On this are two reading rooms or salons—the first 20 by 30, and 14 feet high; the second (the Queen's room), 32 by 30, and 16 feet high; giving a chamber of 144 feet in length.

A gallery runs round each side, supported by stone walls at right angles to the main walls, connected with columns, which stand at a distance of 10 feet from the latter. These carry the roof, thus leaving a clear space of 18 feet for a row of tables up the centre. Under the gallery, in the intercolumnial spaces, the bookcases are placed, built in brick, behind the columns, thus dividing the whole length of the Queen's Room into twelve open compartments.

The distribution of the books on the first floor is shown on the block plan in the Appendix. Each room is capable of containing 2,000 volumes, and the classification, made under the direction of the Librarian, Mr. Tolk, has general ideas common to the public and to the individual student, by confining the latter to the subject of his study, and by diffusing the former through the room.

The resources of the Library on any subject may be thus discovered at a glance, and the wants and desires of all being immediately perceived can be made to meet the demands of any particular section of visitors, while the flexibility of the system will admit of the expansion of the arrangement without any material disturbance of the general plan.

In the galleries the books are arranged against the exterior walls, and separate from the works presented by the Honorable the Commissioners of Patents, 2,000 volumes; a collection of about 2,000 volumes of works of law, statistics, political history and miscellany; and also a collection of about 1,000 volumes treating of medical and surgical subjects. To these departments, students and professional students are admitted by tickets, obtained from the Librarian.

Light is admitted in the reader chamber by windows on three, 8 feet by 4 feet, and in the Queen's Room by windows of equal dimensions, in front and rear, one in each compartment, as well as by skylight in the roof of each room, and transoms elsewhere deeply sunk in panels in the galleries.

In addition to the air constantly introduced through the windows, ventilation is secured by open spaces being left over every bookcase, communicating with doors opened through the main walls; the top air tubes leading from the base of the columns to the roof.

The rooms will accommodate about 150 readers, as follows:—

The reader table	10
The long tables	40
The tables in recesses	100
Stools and other tables	100
Galley tables	100

There are 500 feet run of bookcases, or 6,000 feet run of shelving; and, calculating that on an average one foot will hold five books, the present library will contain 30,000 volumes.

The general tone of the painting is a light cream color for the lower parts, and a much lighter blue for the ceiling; the whole agreeably broken up by a judicious introduction of gilding and ornaments of Chinese red, blue, and white. The relief ornaments, such as carved mouldings, pedestals, &c., are painted with color and enriched with gold.

The walls of the building are principally constructed of brick (glazed bricks), the front faced with stone from Kiangpoa Pass, Tientsin. It is covered over in the Chinese style of architecture, the columns and pilasters standing on stilts, and ornamented by a parapet, partly of moulded plaster, and partly of lacquer; the total height, from the ground to the top of the parapet, being 40 feet.

The Fine Art Room, on the ground floor, measures 45 feet by 80; the walls, which are without architectural features, have (as an experiment) been painted of a delicate light purplish grey, and have been divided into panels by lines and ornaments, some of a darker tint of the same color. The ceiling is divided into deep panels of a light grey color, the beams of a cream color, the whole is decorated with Greek ornament, of the leaf and scroll pattern. The room is ventilated by fans in the walls, carried up to the top of the building. It is worthy of remark that the tint selected for the walls gives a pleasing tone and a freshness and animation to the eyes.

The nature of the studies pursued by the Readers may be judged of by an inspection of the Catalogue. It shows that the Works selected by the Trustees form a solid body of useful and instructive Literature, and also that the public of Victoria is inclined to the generosity of several contributions for many valuable and acceptable donations.

In the decorated library and Photo. Mr. Edward Lestrade Esquire has introduced a number from the Press of the country—the first of the kind published. These display a general arrangement combined with liberty of selection and freedom of taxation, which removed them alike to the benefit and the loss of all.

The degree in which the Library is appreciated is exemplified by the fact that, within 11 months of this year, it was visited by 864,220 Readers; and within the 6 months commencing in spring, 16,600 persons visited the Museum of Art.

Within 6 years the building has been advanced to the extent already described, the Collection of Books amounts to 16,720; the aggregate number of Visitors during the period has been 596,144; while the annual loss to the property by destruction of or wilful injury to the Books has not reached a single value of 1.

Books have been contributed to the Municipal Districts, within 10 miles of Melbourne, namely:—

	Donations.
Collegiate	20,297
Private	8,368
St. Kilda	4,766
Brighton	2,721
Williamstown	1,654
Kew and Hawthorn	2,400
	40,906

A loss of from 100 to 400 volumes (judicious of those in the Library), for a period of 6 months, is made to the Melbourne and Library Institutes of these towns, who not only receive a number of a number number for a like period return. The books have hitherto been returned with regularity and with a complete fulfilment of the conditions of the loan. It was the design of the Trustees to have extended the circulation throughout the country; however, they have not yet been empowered so to do.

The Institution may now, therefore, be considered as established in the tastes and affections of the people of Victoria.

Twenty years have elapsed since the publication of the first printed Catalogue of the Books in the Melbourne Public Library.

During that period several thousand volumes have been added to the collection, so that a perfect guide to the library resources of the Institution no longer exists.

To supply the want, felt by all intelligent enquirers, the publication of a Supplement has been undertaken. The volumes appeared suitable for annexing to the Catalogue of Books a List of the objects of Art of various disciplines, as well as of the miscellaneous Illustrations of Science, Art-Herbariums, Zoology, and other allied subjects which the building contains; thus giving to the public in the permanent form information not conveyed before. Such a list is now published.

In opening their palace the Trustees consider it their first duty to record, which they do with much satisfaction, that the representations preferred by them on behalf of the public respecting the necessity for an extension of the building were entertained in a liberal spirit by the Government and generously supported by Parliament.

Yours taken in the years 1863 and 1864 have supplied the sum of £11,000, with which a portion of the northern wing has been completed.

The efforts considerably increased accommodation. A new reading room, 50 feet long, corresponding in size, architectural structure, and features with the Queen's Room, open from the General Chamber of commerce. In this and in its collection arrangements are facilities as for the systematic distribution of the books according to the distinctive classification originally adopted in the volume. And the public are now admitted in a suite of well-lighted, well-ventilated apartments, 500 feet in length, 50 in breadth, and 20 feet in height, capable of containing sixty thousand volumes of books, and of accommodating at the same time, without inconvenience to themselves, six hundred readers.

The number of volumes in the Library at the close of the year 1844 was 86,729; that ascertained on the last enumeration was about 94,000. Intelligence has been recently received that nearly 8,000 more have been prepared for shipment from London. Thus, with others ordered, the arrival of which may be expected in the course of the coming three months, may raise the number of volumes to something more than 100,000, of these many are of the highest order of literary and scientific merit, many of a rare and of an expensive character which the resources of the Government of the Province would not have enabled them to purchase. For them the public are indebted to the munificence of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and of the Sovereigns of several of the states of Europe, as well as to the civility of several departments of the Government of the United Kingdom and of Foreign countries, and the liberality of many literary and scientific Societies and of private individuals.

The Emperor of the French has enriched the collection with a Second Division even more valued and important than that with which he was on a former occasion pleased to honor the Institution, and the General-General of the Imperial Majesty has, with a kindness natural to a person of his extended travel and learning, offered his assistance to render more perfect the collection of French authors at present deposited within the walls.

The Emperor of Russia has extended his patronage to this Library, and also to that of the University of Moscow.

The King of Prussia presented, with other books of peculiar interest, a copy of Lepsius' great work on Egypt, in twelve volumes of the largest size; these were accompanied with most encouraging promises of further aid by the Prince, Librarian of the Royal Library of Berlin.

The late King of Denmark, through the medium of the Librarian of the Royal Library of Copenhagen, has transmitted a considerable number of volumes.

The King of Italy bestowed in his Council, recently appointed, a handsome gift, which indicates substantially the Majesty's sympathy for the Library.

The Imperial Geographical Society of Austria have forwarded, at the instance of the venerable Blüdenberg, a large body of scientific productions of great practical value, and

In addition to that formerly given by that and by other Societies in Florence. The Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries of Denmark have, through the instrumentality of the distinguished historian Moltke, sent from Copenhagen a new and curious set of Chronicles, connected with the history of the colonies of the north of Europe, including a complete series of Icelandic Sagas, compiled and published under the superintendence of the Arnamagnæus Society, and the auspices of the Danish Government. And in the University of Copenhagen the public owe their acknowledgements for help cordially given to that Library, and to that of our University also.

The assistance afforded by the British Government has consisted of the expenses of some libraries of civil history, policy, and political sciences, the tedious compilation of which had hitherto been left by the public. The Lords of the Treasury, obligingly moved by Mr. Peel, gave their sanction to an application addressed to them, and the War-office, the Ordnance, and the Admiralty, furnished an extensive supply of military and naval history, surveys, maps, and charts, with which libraries of information the Library has been hitherto imperfectly provided.

The Board of Trade and of Education gave a comprehensive series of their publications. The Trustees of the British Museum all the books owned by their society, together with a facsimile of the Old Testament from the Alexandrine Codex, six volumes folio—a noble present, suggested by the correspondence of the Secretary, Mr. Foxmaul.

Lord Russell was pleased to allow Mr. Thackeray, of the Prince's Office, to collect the presentation a selection of papers not usually procurable except through such influence. To those, and others not specifically mentioned here, for which the Trustees have already expressed their thanks, are to be superadded copies of the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Lords and Commons, comprised in nearly 2,000 volumes, which the public owe to the high consideration of Lord Bunsfield and the Speaker; and, also, the voluminous history of the Record Commission and the Rolls publications, which throw upon English history some of the most important lights discovered in modern times, for which the public are indebted to the liberality of the Duke of Devonshire, the Master of the Rolls.

The form in which the first Catalogue was drawn up has been altered so, not alone to preserve uniformity between the original volume and its successive copies, but because it is considered that most, if not all, of the requirements of an easily understood and ready means of access to the contents of the Library are by it fulfilled.

An actual classification of the books (as shown in the diagram which follows the preface) is made in the book-name, which is and within the comprehension of the normal character. Each compartment contains one leading division of learning, with its branches.

directly affiliated or separate subdivisions and sections. The listing furnishes an abstracted synopsis of the contents of each compartment, and a reference from it to the alphabetical map will enable the reader to satisfy himself with full particulars respecting the work of which he was in search.

On the ground floor is a room thirty feet by fifty, into which have been removed the casts of statues, bronzes, and marbles originally erected together in the small chamber on the south side of the building, and necessarily exposed in the entrance hall to the risk of accidental injury, from which, thanks to the more than ordinary carefulness of the natives, they have fortunately escaped. There are sculpted than objects acquired some years since, and the provisions made in the year 1862 by French artists of the country now resident in Europe. In weight's worth these exceed in value £200, but they are in no estimated infinitely more highly as instruments of the faculty feeling and sympathy of the masses. Particular descriptions of these will be found in the annual Catalogue of the contents of the Museum of Art.

Alliance was made at the address of the Trustees to His Excellency Sir Henry Derry in May, 1861, to the intention with which the establishment of this department had been previously recommended. The original expectation was that a School of Design might be ultimately opened, in which would be displayed types of the works of various artists, and interpretations of the development and history of art. It was then suggested that in this country, as far removed from the centre of the restored empire, the presence of such objects, together with others of a kindred nature to be associated with them, would serve as the best instructors of the public mind, and most conducive to an appreciation of what is correct and beautiful, and to that refinement the cultivation of which is an indispensable part of a true conception of the principles of Beauty, and a right acquaintance with the real uses of wealth.

It is pleasing to be able to state that this Museum has served as a source of attraction even beyond the limits anticipated; and will have acquired as it is necessary that the warm desire of the Trustees has been already testified, and that, through the enlightened liberality of Mr. Maugby (a former inhabitant of Malabar), an entire room of the disquisitions made in the South Kensington School of Design has been placed at their disposal, so that the teaching of classes in drawing, modelling, and design, may commence as soon as the necessary arrangements can be perfected, now dependent only upon the erection of suitable apartments in which to receive the students.

A still further advance has recently been made in accordance to the feeling of solicitude for the production of the Fine Arts as directly connected by the public.

The more disinclination of the Government, occasioned by the judicious loyalty of Parliament, has given to the country the means of beginning the formation of a gallery of Paintings.

Some of money, voted in the years 1852 and 1855, were retained in England early this year, with a request addressed to Sir Charles Eastlake, the present director of the National Gallery of England, that he would leave the country with the benefit of his great knowledge, experience, and judgment, in making a choice of such pictures as he should consider suitable.

To this request he was engaged to accord his immediate assent, and in the course of the month he was able to select thirteen original oil paintings.

These have arrived, and will be accessible to view in a portion of the north wing, fitted up for their temporary reception until the contemplated picture gallery can be erected.

It is not within the scope of this paper to discuss upon the variety of style and treatment, the admirable execution, and the various artistic excellences which they represent.

It is sufficient to observe that they are calculated to awaken in a large portion of our population, to which such works are absolutely new, a feeling of intellectual enjoyment, sincere interest, and to afford every opportunity to all competent to estimate truly the properties requisite to form pleasing and instructive acquisitions.

In conclusion, it may not be out of place to remind those who may peruse these lines, that only 10 years and a half have passed since the first issue of the Melbourne Public Library was held, and that 5 years have not yet elapsed since the central chamber was first thrown open to the public.

Since the printing of this volume was commenced 8,442 volumes have been added to the collection.

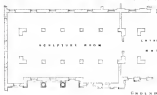

For 136 of these the public are indebted to the sustained generosity of the Commissioners of Patents. The review of these important publications, brought down to 1864, numbers 2,544 volumes.

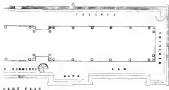

The Trustees have also to acknowledge the magnificent donation of the Antiquarian Society, consisting of 404 volumes of rare and valuable works. These were obtained by means of the exertions of the able and zealous librarian, Mr. Tulk, who is now in Europe.

The number of Volumes in the Library exceeds 28,000.
